Matter MAT-2026-0631 — Meridian Retail Concepts Pte Ltd — Exclusive Distributorship Agreement

Subject: Halcyon Instruments — Singapore distributorship

Jonathan,

We have been offered the exclusive Singapore distributorship for Halcyon Instruments' laboratory equipment range. We would be the distributor — buying from them, reselling here, carrying the stock and the warranty exposure.

Their draft is a supplier's document from start to finish. Liability capped at the value of the individual order, no indemnity for product defect or IP, and they can terminate on ninety days for any reason while we are locked in for three years and carrying six months of inventory.

The thing that actually frightens me is the exclusivity. If we build the market for three years and they then take it back or appoint someone alongside us, we have spent our money building their brand. Please fix that.

Subject: RE: Halcyon Instruments — Singapore distributorship

Farah,

We will draft from our own customer-side distributorship form rather than mark up theirs. Four things will do most of the work.

Exclusivity with teeth: exclusive in fact, not merely in name, with an express undertaking that the supplier will not appoint another distributor, sell direct into the territory, or knowingly supply any party who resells here, and a right for you to buy any such sales at your margin.

A product liability and IP indemnity running from them to you. You are the party a Singapore consumer sues; you must be able to pass that up the chain.

A default clause with real intermediate remedies — the right to withhold payment, to source equivalent product elsewhere while a supply failure continues, and to set off. Termination alone is no use to you when you have customers waiting.

Symmetrical termination for convenience with a long notice period, plus a stock buy-back obligation on termination. Without buy-back you are left holding inventory you can no longer lawfully sell under the brand.
